Lucky Numbers

'You are late, what took you so long?' asked Mum.

'It's a rollover jackpot and everybody in the area was wanting to buy a ticket,' replied Dad.

'I sent you for milk - I'm dying for a coffee. You could have used the automatic till!' said Mum.

'I know, but I couldn't resist getting a ticket.'

'That's fine, but you forgot to get what I sent you for! Put your coat on and off you go,' said Mum. 'It closes at ten so you've got ten minutes to get there.'

'I'll walk quickly, no problem.'

The Breakdown

The journey was going really well and they would easily travel the last ten miles in about ten minutes. The road was clear and the countryside views were stunning.

'Oh, no. I've just run over some glass at the side of the road,' exclaimed Jethro. 'It's deflating so I'm going to pull over into this lay-by.'

'I take it you have got a spare?' asked Anya.

'Yes, but it's under that mountain of luggage in the boot. You do know we are only away for three days,' laughed Jethro.

They unloaded their luggage onto the lay-by. Jethro then took the jack to the front of the car and started raising it. Anya got the spare wheel ready.

'We could ring your breakdown company,' said Anya.

'If I can't get the wheel off I will, but they often take over an hour to get here. Hopefully, by then the tyre will be changed and we will be at our hotel. Anyway, at least it's not raining.'

1. Which tyre was punctured? _____

2. What had been their speed before the puncture? _____

3. Was Jethro going to phone for help? _____

4. Who had taken the most luggage? _____
